SOCIAL DETERMINANTS OF LATINO HEALTH DISPARITIES IN THE 21ST CENTURY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23 | 12-1 PM|
LORY STUDENT CENTER, ROOM 312

Dr. Evelinn Borrayo, PhD
Professor, Department of Psychology
Colorado State University

EVELINN A. BORRAYO holds a Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology with specialty in Clinical Health Psychology from the University of North Texas (1999). Dr. Borrayo is a Professor in the Department of Psychology at Colorado State University (CSU) and the Director of Training of the doctoral program in Counseling Psychology. Dr. Borrayo is also the Executive Director of the Latino Research and Policy Center (LRPC) at the Colorado School of Public Health (CSPH), where she holds a secondary appointment as Professor.

Her research focuses on health disparities in the prevention, control, and treatment of chronic diseases among medically underserved populations. Most of her work has focused primarily on the social determinants of health behavior and how to develop clinical interventions to prevent, control, and treat cancer-related health disparities that affect Latinos. In addition, she has expertise conducting community-based participatory research (CBPR) in medical settings and community settings where multiple barriers to access health services lead to health disparities among the medically underserved. Dr. Borrayo teaches graduate courses in health psychology and in multicultural psychology.
